CARPETS,
CURTAINS,
FURNISHINGS.

March, 1891, finds us better than ever before prepared for the early Spring trade.
Our two capacious floors are filled with the latest and best products of the loom, and we are prepared to give our customers all the advantages, in selection and purchase, to be had in the more pretentious city house, with expense advantages largely in our favor in ruling prices on like qualities of goods.

We need hardly again allude to the advantages, as an exclusive Carpet House, we are enabled to offer, in meeting divers tastes, and specific requirements entering into the purchase of a Carpet, relative to the essentials of beauty and utility, in which your choice is not confined to the meager offerings of the "side show" attractions afforded by the average dabbler.

Long familiarity with the products of reliable houses, enables us to place our orders only with such, preferring to give our patrons goods of intrinsic value, rather than indulge in the deceptive blazonry of "glittering generalities" born of Shoddy, as a means of "attracting" customers.

It is our purpose to make all friendships formed through business intercourse, lasting ones, and having once secured your patronage, to retain it, believing that success and square toed integrity are not necessarily strangers in the successful prosecution of business—a fact of pleasing significance, in contemplative respect of the friendships commemorative of pleasant and confidential relations with our patrons.

In alluding to the foregoing, we claim not necessarily an exceptional standing, but only a determination to exercise the plain and homely methods of honorable dealing, characteristic in the makeup of the man desirous of "a good name rather than great riches."

Our recent purchases embrace the latest in artistic achievement of designs and colorings. We are confident of your recognition of the advantages we offer, on an inspection of our stock—for which purpose the latchstring of welcome is always out—which embraces Moquettes, Velvets, Body and Tapestry Brussels, and Ingrain Carpets; Art Squares; Wilton Daghestan, Smyrna and Tapestry Rugs; Hassocks; China Matting, Japanese Embroidyou should see them, they are beauties.

Large and elegant line of Lace Curtains, in Irish Points, Swiss Tambours, Brussels, Nottinghams and Muslins. Chenille Portiers.
Madras and China Silks for Sash Curtains.
Curtain Loops, Chains and Shade Pulls. Curtain Poles, Shade and Shade Fixtures. Curtain Pole Sockets. Sash Rods and Brackets.

Tapestry, Ramie, Jute Goods and Plushes for Upholstering, Rug and Upholstery Fringes, Gimps and Gimp Tacks for Upholstery, Carpet Bindings, Oil Cloth Bindings, Felt and Sewed Linings for Carpets, &c., &c.

In conclusion, we promise you our best efforts in making your visits alike pleasant and profitable, and shall always have our house in order for callers, whether for inspection or purchase.

The Mortgage.
He bought in 1865 a farm of stumps and stones.
His name was God-De Glorified, his surname was John.
He put a mortgage on the farm, and then in
"In twenty years I'll pay it up," said God-De Glorified.

The mortgage had a hungry maw that swallowed corn and wheat.
He toiled with patience night and day to let the mortgage eat.
He slowly worked himself to death, and on the rainy hillside
They laid beyond the monster's reach, good God-De Glorified.

And the farm with its encumbrances of mortgage stumps, and stones.
It fell to young Melchizedek Paul Adoniram Jones.
Melchizedek was a likely youth, a holy godly man.
And he vowed to raise that mortgage like a noble Puritan.

And he went forth every morning to the ragged mountain side.
And he dug and dug before him poor old God-De Glorified.
He raised pumpkins and potatoes down the monster's throat to purr.
He gulped them down and smacked his jaws, and calmly asked for more.

He worked until his back was bent, until his hair was gray.
On the hillside through a snowdrift they dug his grave one day!
His little son, Eliphalet, had no time to weep and brood.
For the monster's doorstep growled forever for his food.

He fed him his garden truck, he stuffed his ribs with hay.
And he fed him eggs and butter, but he would not go away.
And Eliphalet staggered with the burden, and then he died.
And slept with old Melchizedek and God-De Glorified.

Then the farm fell to Thomas, and from Thomas fell to John.
Then John fell to Eliphalet, but the mortgage still lived on.
Then it fell to Ralph and Peter, Eli, Abalom, and Paul.
Down through all the generations, but the mortgage killed them all!

About a score of years ago the farm came and Jim called in the mortgage and gave the farm to him.
There's no human heart so empty that it has no ray of hope.
So Jim gave up the ancient farm and went to making soap.

He grew a fifty-millionaire, a bloated, pampered nature.
He owned ten railroads, twenty mines, and the whole State Legislature.
And though he did his great commands, and lived upon his bounty, And he came home, bought back the farm, and the entire county.

S. W. Foss, in Yankee Blade.

WON BY A KISS.

"Is she dead, doctor, or has she only fainted?"

Without answering the question of the frightened groom, "Doctor" Hugh Liscome bent down above the prostrate form upon the grass and placed his hand over her heart, while his own was throbbing.

Presently the look of terror faded from his gleaming glance, he said: "Her heart is beating regularly. She is not dead, nor do I think she is injured seriously. Perhaps, however, you had better get a carriage for she may be unable to reach the Hall by walking."

The groom hurried away, and Dr.
Liscome resumed his examination.
Pretty soon he uttered an exclamation as he discovered a dislocated wrist.

"It's too bad!" he muttered.

He was very young for a doctor, and it was no wonder he was deeply moved, for Mabel Ringwood, the daughter of him of the Hall, was very beautiful.

Hugh Liscome thought he never gazed on such loveliness forever without getting tired of the employment.

After awhile he stooped and kissed her. Almost immediately she opened her eyes. He shrank back appalled; but the look of anguish upon her face, and the whiteness about her lips, recalled him to himself.

"Where am I, and what has happened?" she feebly asked.

"Your horse ran away, Miss Ringwood. You were finally thrown to the ground, and I think your wrist is dislocated."

"Ah, yes, I remember. Sultana got frightened at the trunk and you tried to stop her, but I was thrown to the ground. Were you not hurt, Dr. Lis-come?"

"Oh, nothing to speak of. The horse's feet came down on my boot once, but that is nothing."

"And you risked your life to save me?"

"How can I ever thank you enough?" Mabel exclaimed gratefully.

"Never speaking of my matter again. It was merely an act of duty, and, as it was, a pleasure. Forget it, Miss Ringwood."

"Can you set my wrist?" she demanded, changing the subject.

"I can if you wish it. But the pain will be most terrible during the operation."

"It will have to be set some time, will it not?"

"Certainly."

"The pain will be no greater now than at another time. You may set it now, if you please."

"And closing her pearly teeth tightly together, Mabel waited in silence.

Twice Hugh felt along the wrist before he could gain the requisite comfort, but at last he compressed his fingers and the joint sprang in place with a snap.

"Did it hurt you very severely?" he asked when it was over.

"No, but I did not open her eyes or answer, and he thought that she had fainted again. He could not resist the temptation to give her another kiss.

The kissing, and before noon he had she opened her eyes rather suddenly.
"Was that in lieu of the usual fee?" she asked mischievously.

Fortunately the carriage from the Hall arrived at this particular juncture, with old Mr. Ringwood half frightened to death by the groom.

On leaving the exact state of the case, he proffered Doctor Liscome 20 guineas.

"I can not accept that," said Hugh.

"My professional fee for setting Miss Ringwood's wrist is 1 guinea."

"That or nothing!" roared old Ringwood, excitedly. "You saved her life, and if you do not take the 20, I'll be your mortal enemy."

But the doctor drew back; and the old gentleman, springing into the carriage with as much agility as his great weight would permit, gave orders to drive off. And Hugh went home to dream of Mabel's blue eyes.

Old Mr. Ringwood got over his huff next morning, and before noon he had his daughter's preserver to dine at the hall in the evening.

"Excuse me, doctor," he heartily said, "for my thoughtless boresomeness in asking you take money for such an inestimable service. I had classed you with the common herd of humanity, but I see you are possessed of a different spirit, and you would have done the same thing had it been a poor girl instead of the young lady of Ringwood."

This is the spirit I like to see in Dr. Hugh. I honor you for it."

He spoke so earnestly that Hugh was charmed, and when the solicitations of Mabel had been added to his, the young doctor agreed to become a frequent visitor there.

And a frequent visitor he soon became. And not only a visitor, but a most welcome one, as was evinced by the color that dawned on Mabel's beautiful cheek at his approach, and the constant smile by which her father greeted him.

Altogether, everything appeared in a rosy light, and he was congratulating himself that his prospects were greatly improving, when, all of a sudden, he found that he loved Mabel.

Then the silly young man, afraid of the wealth of the Ringwoods, allowed conscientious to prey upon his frame, and he grew thin as a shadow.

After a time he ceased to visit his friends, and Mabel grew thin as a shadow. But the doctor, whose practice had rapidly grown extensive, drove by each day, like Jehu, the son of Nimshie, and never looked toward the window and cry. But when her father would ask what troubled her, she would not tell him.

Old Mr. Ringwood was sorely puzzled.

He liked the doctor and wondered what ailed him, and wondered why he stayed away so perversely. And he loved Mabel and wondered why she was growing so terribly pale and thin.
But for all his study the riddle remained unsolved.

One day a thought like an inspiration flashed into his mind. He would send for the doctor to come to Mabel.
No sooner decided upon than done, and Hugh came over in haste, believing she was very ill. The servant was not explicit.

"Where is she?" he cried, "and how long has she been ill?"

The old gentleman saw that he was intensely excited and he got another inspiration.

"She isn't so very ill," he muttered.
"I think that she's only pining for you."

Poor Dr. Hugh! he turned all sorts of colors and grasps a chair for support.

"If you love her, my boy, go in and see," said the old gentleman, warmly.

"I've not the slightest objection, provided your love is reciprocal, and I shall feel proud to have you for my son-in-law. Don't mind the money, my boy, but only think that human-nature is human nature for the time of wealth."

And he slipped from the room just as Mabel entered it by another door.

"Hugh!"

Do you think kind reader that we would intrude a scene of private love-making? We shall not do it, so you will be disappointed, perhaps.

"I did think," said Mabel, afterward, "that you might have been more enough to ask me whether I loved you or not, instead of running away from me."

"Then you were conscious," said Dr.
Hugh. "You might have rebuked me."

"I have seen your face, remember, and I have seen your eyes. Here I met Tippo Tasso, his staff and a few of his many wives. He was tipsy, and hundreds were sitting around him drinking palm wine and making merry.
Here I was shown the dead body of a man stuck upon a thirty foot pole and the barrel of a gun driven into the ground, and I thought this thing inflicted upon the man for bringing his gun into the market—but that law is now void and every man can now buy his old flint lock for 100 brass rods ($1.)

A man whose body was half black and half white told me the one who had bewitched him had been buried alive.

There is a custom far away up the river that when a king dies many slaves as well as his wives are massacred, so that they may go with the king to the land of spirits. One end of a rope is securely fastened to a strong, pliable limb of a tree; the other end is pulled down and fastened to the foot of the victim, who kneels beneath the tree with hands and feet tied. The executioner then steps forward and with one blow of his hideous knife he severs the head of the victim from the body; the head is sent tossing into the air; it is picked up and with others boiled and put in pots to decorate the grave of the dead chief.

THE USES OF POTATOES.

Many Ways of Cooking It that are Varied

Did you ever think of the many dishes that can be made from the potato, or the many uses to which this oft-forgotten vegetable can be put?

Many housekeepers who complain of lack of variety in winter and get sur-fied of potatoes, that they have the right of one, are ignorant of the many palatable dishes that really can be made of this staple food. The potato is generally associated with the "poor," starving natives of much injured Ireland. It has a larger acreage in the United States than any other crop, and is the way to boil them and make them very nice. The baked potato is generally the most common and favorite way of cooking them, and the mashed potatoes, unless light and feathery, is just as horrid as rice cooked to a pulp instead of with each grain standing apart as it should be. The fried potato is simply pressed through a colander after being mashed. Then there are potato balls, white sauce, potato pie, the potato, potato timbale, potato puff, potato croquettes, potato border, potato omelet, potato pats, princess potatoes, potato soup, creamed potatoes, potato gratin, potato salad, potato croquettes, potatoes a la maitre d'hotel, scalloped potatoes, potato balls with cream sauce, Saratoga potatoes, potatoes baked with meat, fry-stew, potato salad and potato tea cakes are all different dishes that can be concocted with the assistance of the common and familiar vegetable known to all the world.

Space does not permit of an explanation of these dishes, and, as named, many of which are doubtless familiar to nearly all good housekeepers. The last named dainty, potato tea cakes, are probably the most popular, and therefore be dignified by a short description. The potatoes are mashed and seasoned to a queen's taste, only just enough salt and pepper, and a pinch of flour into them and mix with sufficient milk to make a stiff batter. Add a quarter of a cake of compressed yeast dissolved in a cup of milk, and a cup of sweet milk or cream, or half a cupful of homemade yeast, and set in a warm place to rise. When this is sufficiently light and springy put in cold water and bake like cakes. While they are not spit and butter and send to the table.

Gen. Sherman as a Chairman.

Myron W. Reed, speaking of Gen.
Sherman, says: "He was a famous chairman. I have seen him preside at the meeting of the Army of the Tennessee. But Sherman as a chairman was officer Speaker Reed would be a model for a statue of Diffidence. He would do it this way: 'Gentlemen, in selecting officers for the Army of the Tennessee for the year to come you must take time and thought and choose the right men.' Then he would go down into his vest pocket and read a list of names. Then he said: 'It is moved and seconded that these nominations pass as read. All in favor say "aye."' He could get no business done by a deliberate body than Bismarck. It happened that someone made a motion to adjourn. "Oh," he said, "it down, it is not time to adjourn. The presiding officer of the gang smashers' convention was nothing to him."

Germany's Imperial Bank.

The imperial Bank of Germany has the right to issue paper to the extent of $75,000,000, and as much more as it has gold and silver on hand as security for it, and practically to any extent beyond this; but on the other hand it must pay interest at 5 per cent per annum to the government. The bank has not of late availed itself of this privilege, possibly because it would not pay, and has confined its issue of bank notes to the regular $75,000,000 and the amount of gold and silver on hand, or say $225,000,000 in all.

Bechtler Gold Dollar.

A resident of Lexington, Mo., has what is known as a "A. Bechtler Car-gold dollar." It contains twenty-seven grains of gold, and was made by A. Bechtler of South Carolina, who had a permit for the purpose from the government shortly after the end of the revolutionary war. It contains $1.07 worth of gold.

A Returned Missionary Relates His Experiences in a Curious Country.

I told my boy, Kibo-Ka, to get soft-boiled eggs. When he came in he said all was ready but the eggs. He said: "They have been boiling half an hour, but I don't think they are boiled soft yet."

Just before I reached Stanley Pool I had an unpleasant experience with "drivers." They are always on the move. They travel by millions, and drive everything that is before them, the missionary and native alike must leave the house when they come, whether it be day or night. All kinds of insects, lizards, and even chickens are driven by these voracious ants, which are a little larger than our largest black ants at home. The elephant is driven to madness when these ants get into his trunk, writes a missionary in the Seattle Telegraph.
